

- A. In the story, The Golden Touch, you have seen how being greedy is not a good habit.

Now work in groups of four and discuss this question with your friends. Do you think sharing your toys or books with your friends is a good habit?

Then, each group should make a poster about the values of sharing and caring. Once finished, put up the poster in your classroom.

Talk about the following things in the poster:

1. What is sharing and caring?
2. What do you feel when you share your things with others?
3. Which other words are related to sharing? Include a mind map of these words in the poster.

To make a poster, follow these steps:

- Think what the main topic for the poster is.
- Choose bright colours to make your poster attractive.
- Your handwriting should be neat and clean.
- Choose a fitting title for your poster.
- The mind map can look like this. You can add more words, and design this differently too.

- B. In the poem Homes, you have read about the different homes of animals. Now see the images given below.

Divide the class into three groups. Each group will choose an animal and act like it before the other groups, without saying anything. The other group will have to guess which animal it is, and name its home. For every correct answer, 1 score is awarded to the team. Continue this for two rounds and decide the winner. Your teacher will guide you.

Learning by Doing

- A. You read about a wolf family in the story Mowgli Joins the Wolf Pack. We find different kinds of families around us. Just like how people live in families, many animals like elephants, lions, dolphins, honeybees and ants also live in families.

Work in groups of four. Read about the animals that live in families. You can also look up the Internet. Then collect images of these animal families, paste them on a chart paper, and under each image, write two sentences about it. Name the image with the collective noun used for each animal family, like the example given here.

Now, in your group, discuss about the importance of a family. Talk about how each family member should behave with the others so that everyone can live happily with one another. Then, take four chits, one for each member. Write the questions given below, one on each chit.

a pod of dolphins

Is teamwork important in a family? Why?

Should each member be kind towards the others? Why?

Should all the members support each other? Why?

Which qualities are important for a family to be happy? Think of values like patience, honesty and kindness.

Once you are done, mix all the chits and keep them on the table. Each of you should pick one chit and answer the question given on your chit. Then stick these chits on the chart paper where you have pasted the images of animal families.

- B. In the story Project Sunshine, Jeet made a model aeroplane with the help of his uncle and his father. He then flew it around with his friends in the park.

Work in groups of six and discuss the process Jeet followed.

planning

1. planning all the stages and making a note of it
2. making the design of the model
3. making lists of the things to buy

collecting the resources

1. shopping for the correct material, and tools
2. building the plane
3. colouring it

experiencing

1. running around and flying the plane with his friends

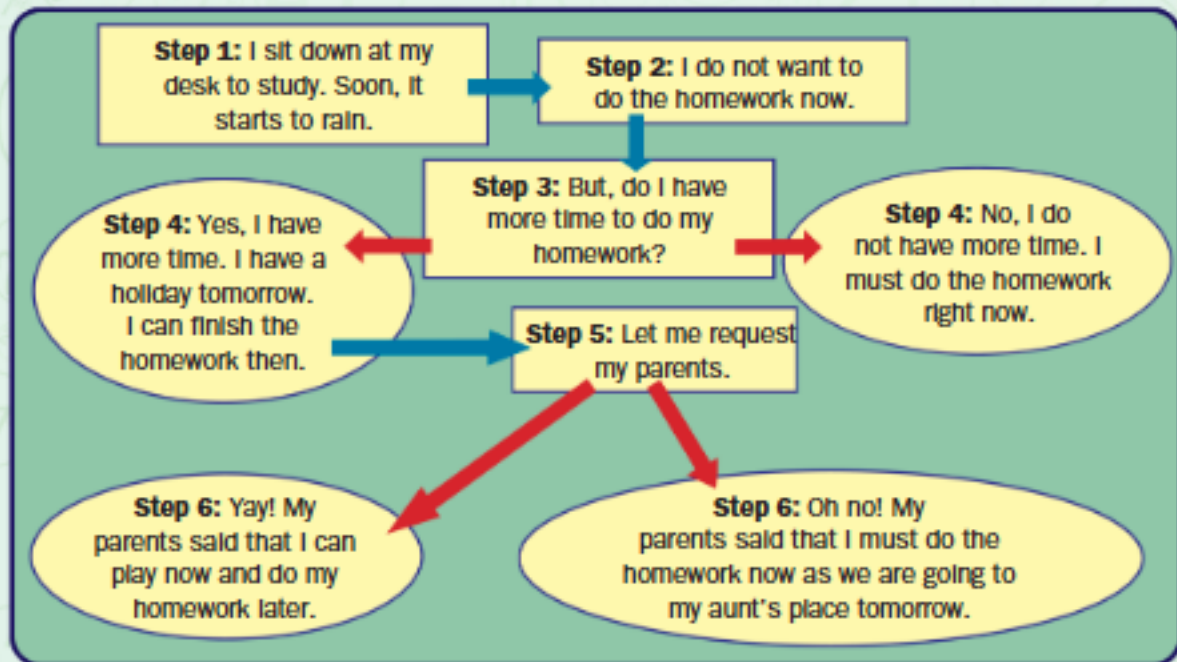

Then each group must make a model of any other vehicle. You can make a model out of any kind of material, like dough, paper, cardboard sheets/boxes and newspaper. Remember to paint the models brightly and neatly. Then share your experience with your classmates and play together with your models.

21st Century Skills

- A. In the poem I Meant to Do My Work Today, you read about the speaker who could not do homework because he/she found many beautiful things around him/her.

Imagine you have a lot of homework to do. You are sitting at your desk at home and getting ready. Suddenly, rain clouds gather in the sky, it turns dark and it starts to rain heavily. You do not feel like doing your homework. You want to request your parents to let you do the homework some other time.

First, plan what you want to say and prepare yourself with a step-by-step flow chart, as shown below.

Now, request your parents to let you do the homework some other time, based on the plan you made. Work in pairs. First, write down the conversation between you and any one of your parents. Then, role play the same. Take help of the model conversation given here.

- B. In the poem The Song of the Engine, you read about a train's experience. Did you know that there are many kinds of trains? These are some of them:

1. short-distance trains
2. long-distance trains
3. freight trains

Work in groups of three. Look up the Internet, books or newspapers to find more information about these trains. Collect images for the different kinds of trains. Now, each member in the group chooses any one kind of train and speaks about it. Then, as a group, present your findings and discuss how these trains are different from one other.

You: May I do my homework later? It is raining and I do not feel like studying.

Your father/mother: Do you have a holiday tomorrow?

You: Yes, we do.

Your father/mother: Okay, then make sure to finish your homework tomorrow. You can play now.

You: Thank you so much. I promise to do the homework tomorrow.

Life Competencies

- A. In the story The Fortunate Pedlar, you have read about the pedlar's dreams. For this activity, you need these things for each group:

1 paper cup
glue

6 chits of paper of any colour
sketch pens and crayons

1 coloured sheet of A4-size paper

Now work in groups of six and make your dream basket. Follow the instructions given here:

1. Each one of you write down your dream on a chit of paper. It is alright if your dream does not seem very real.
2. Fold your chits and put it in the paper cup.
3. Then, take out all the chits, and read them.
4. On the A4 sheet, draw a big basket. Stick these chits inside the basket. Your dream basket is ready.

I want to be a chef.

I want a pet dragon.

I dream to be a tree.

I wish I could have an animal farm.

- B. In the story How the Sun was Rescued, there are many animal characters and interesting dialogues.

Now work in groups of six and get ready for a play contest in your class. You can take ten days to prepare the play.

Follow the instructions given below to enact the play.

- Decide which play you will enact. You can choose any story and change it into a play. For this, you will have to create a script. The script will have these details: the name of the play, the names of the characters, their dialogues and stage instructions.
- Decide who will take up these core responsibilities: researching, writing the script, directing the play, acting, designing the costumes and designing the stage. Each member should take one responsibility.

When one group is performing, the other groups must assess their performance and score them. Take help of the given assessment pattern here. After marking each section, add the scores to get the final score. Remember, for a fair assessment, you must be patient when all the other groups are performing.

Groups	Pronunciation	Flow of story	Stage design	Costume design	Total score
	(5 marks)	(5 marks)	(5 marks)	(5 marks)	(20 marks)
