

11. Conjunction

Definition and Introduction

A conjunction is a word that joins words, phrases, or clauses in a sentence. It helps to connect ideas and show relationships between them. Conjunctions make sentences clear and meaningful. They are an important part of English grammar. Correct use of conjunctions improves sentence flow.

She is poor but honest.

I like tea and coffee.

He worked hard, so he succeeded.

She was tired yet she continued.

He did not come because he was ill.

Coordinating Conjunction

Coordinating conjunctions join words or clauses of equal importance. The most common coordinating conjunctions are for, and, nor, but, or, yet, and so. They connect similar grammatical units. They do not make one clause dependent on another. They are often remembered by the word FANBOYS.

She sang and danced.

He is poor but honest.

Hurry up or you will be late.

He worked hard so he succeeded.

She was tired yet she finished.

Subordinating Conjunction

Subordinating conjunctions join a main clause with a subordinate clause. They show the relationship between the two clauses. The subordinate clause depends on the main clause for meaning. They introduce adverb clauses. They are common in complex sentences.

I will go when you come.

He failed because he was careless.

She stayed home although she was ill.

If it rains, we will cancel the trip.

We waited until the bell rang.

Conjunction of time

Conjunctions of time show when an action happens. They introduce clauses related to time. Common examples include when, while, before, after, and until.

They help show sequence of events. They are used in narratives.

When the bell rang, we left.

I was reading while she cooked.

After he finished work, he rested.

Before you go, meet me.

Wait until I return.

Conjunction of place

Conjunctions of place show where an action happens. They connect clauses related to place. Common examples include where and wherever. They answer the question 'where?'. They help describe location.

Sit where you like.

I will follow you wherever you go.

This is the place where we met.

He lives where the river bends.

Stay wherever you feel safe.

Conjunction of reason

Conjunctions of reason explain why something happens. They introduce clauses showing cause. Common examples include because, since, and as. They answer the question 'why?'. They are common in explanations.

He failed because he was careless.

Since it was raining, we stayed inside.

As he was ill, he rested.

She cried because she was hurt.

I stayed home as I was tired.

Conjunction of concession

Conjunctions of concession show contrast or unexpected results. They introduce clauses showing opposition. Common examples include although, though, and even though. They add emphasis to contrast. They are common in formal writing.

Although he is poor, he is honest.

Though it was cold, we went out.

Even though he tried, he failed.

Though she was tired, she worked.

Conjunction of condition

Conjunctions of condition show conditions for something to happen. They introduce conditional clauses. Common examples include if, unless, and provided that. They are used in conditional sentences. They are important in grammar exercises.

If it rains, we will stay inside.

Unless you hurry, you will miss the bus.

Provided that you work hard, you will succeed.

If he calls, tell me.

Unless you study, you will fail.

Conjunction of comparison

Conjunctions of comparison show comparison between two things. They introduce clauses used for comparison. Common examples include than, as, and as if. They help compare actions or qualities. They are used in descriptive sentences.

She is taller than her sister.

He runs as fast as his brother.

She sings better than me.

He behaves as if he knows everything.

She is as clever as her friend.

Rules of Correlative Conjunction

Correlative conjunctions are used in pairs to join words or clauses. Both parts of the pair must be used together. They join equal grammatical units. Correct pairing is very important. They add emphasis to sentences.

Either you come or you stay.

Neither he nor his brother was present.

Both Ram and Shyam are students.

Not only she but also her sister came.

Whether you like it or not, you must do it.

Correlative conjunctions

Common correlative conjunctions include either-or, neither-nor, both-and, not only-but also, and whether-or. They are always used in pairs. They connect similar elements. They are frequently tested in exams. Proper use improves sentence structure.

Either you study or you fail.

Neither the teacher nor the students were late.

Both the boys and the girls participated.

Not only he but also his friends were invited.

Whether you agree or disagree, the rule applies.
